

MASTER OF DIVINITY FORM B
Requirements for the Specialization in Women, Society, and Church Studies

Purpose

This specialization prepares students to address matters involving women in society and church. The specialization's basic structure is the same for each student but the specialization will be tailored to meet the student's educational and vocational goals.

Outcomes for the Specialization

- Knowledge of issues faced by women in society and church
- Understanding historical developments of women and women's movements
- Knowledge of writings that represent a feminist school of thought
- Methods of reading texts and situations through a feminist hermeneutic or epistemology
- Creatively and critically using feminist approaches to the practices of ministry

Portfolio

These outcomes shall be demonstrated through a portfolio that will represent each course counted for the specialization as well as pertinent extracurricular projects. The portfolio will be evaluated by one of the specializations' advisors. The portfolio may include the following items.

- Course syllabi
- Essays, research papers, and class projects
- Extracurricular projects, reflections, essays, liturgies, sermons

This specialization will be nurtured by courses offered across the Saint Paul School of Theology curriculum. This broad based approach to courses represents the many points of intersection between this specialization and the disciplines and fields of theological education even as it makes this specialization distinctive from other Master of Divinity specializations at Saint Paul. A course may count toward the specialization as long as the student makes a case that demonstrates how the matter relating to Women, Society, and Church Studies provides a lens for the student's work in the course. The field of Women, Society, and Church Studies will provide the primary lens for nine credit hours of course work. In six credit hours of course work it could be a supportive lens. Usually students will receive approval for this supportive lens from the course instructor as well as from an advisor to the specialization.
